A FAMILY GENEALOGY

The word GENEALOGY is derived from two Greek words - "Genea," meaning descent, and "logos," meaning discourse. It is the vital branch of history, catalogued as one of the social sciences.¹ This paper presented on the history of the Jackson Family and the roots of their beginning. The text runs from the 17th century through to the 21st Century covering over 500 hundred years. Some material and valuable papers are in our possession through inheritance; some have been acquired by individual investigations into family history. Dates and events are authenticated by primary record research when possible.

LIST OF MAJOR FAMILY NAMES

The origins of surnames: Because it is often impossible to know the original, form and, therefore, the etymology or meaning of the surname of a particular family until one has traced that family's history and seen how its surname has changed over time the various available dictionaries of surnames, should be used with the greatest care.²

Bradley is an English masculine given name. It comes from a surname and a place name meaning "broad wood" or "broad clearing" in Old English. It is also an Anglicization of the Irish Gaelic name O'Brolachán (also O'Brallaghan) from County Tyrone in Ireland.

Bronkhorst. Early in the Netherlands and the Low Countries, the use of surnames was not in high use. After Napoleon's invasion of 1806 within this area and other independent "nations", Napoleonic Law applied, with the requirement of mandatory surnames. There exist today a city called Bronkhorst and can be considered the root of this family taking on the name.

Cool. Roots are German and/or Dutch origin. The letter "C" is not known to the pure Holland language. But the Netherlands "K" almost immediately changes to "C: in early American records.

Edgett. English: from the Old English personal name Ecggeat, or in some cases perhaps from Ecgheard.

Foss. Roots are German Origin. The Foss surname appears in the West Prussia land register for Graudenz, West Prussia.

Gailey. The name is of Scotch origin, and belonged to a Highland Clan, the Chieftain of which was Buchanan. Buchanan, it would appear, was the original name of the family, but for the success of one of the family in a tournament, and the flowery profusion of the spot on which the victory achieved, now called by the name of Gay-Lea or Gealy. Such is the oldest spelling of the name.

Additional written public genealogy surname records of the name GALLIE, Gally, for the Gaelic of Sutherland Gallatch is the collective name for the people of Caithness as being foreigners, i.e. (mainly) of Norse origin. On the expulsion of the Gunns from Caithness soon after 1589 many of them found asylum in Ross-shire, chiefly about Tain, and the collective name became their surname. "About the middle of the seventeenth century a Sir John Sinclair, in Caithness, became proprietor of the lands of Culiss and Wester Rarichie. This led to the introduction into the parish of various individuals of the name Gunn from the boundary that separates Caithness from Sutherland. The people of the parish called them 'na gallaich' (or strangers); and from this arose the name Gallie, which has been for nearly 200 years a common and rather respectable name among the inhabitants. The name is now, however, much on the decrease" (New statistical account of Ross and Cromarty). Gallies are therefore reckoned a sept of the Gunn's. Gallie is also found as a surname in Ayrshire and the west, with the meaning of 'stranger' (gallda). The tenement of Patrick Gallie in Irvine is mentioned in 1426 (Irvine, II, p.130). Donald Gallie appears in Ardroskitill in 1620 (Sasines, II, 81), and Finlay Gallie in Iskichragane in 1662 (Isles). John Galie (Galy, Gelie, or Gely) in Barmoire, Bute, and his wife were accused of being witches in 1662 (HP., III). The name in Bute was afterwards spelled Gillies. In Ulster Gallie has been softened to Gailey. The American branches have adopted the spelling "Gayley," and those in Ireland "Gailey," around the early 1800's.³

Geukes. Roots are from Netherlands.

Jackson. The name in England is the twenty-fifth numerous name, and it is probable that the name was in Ireland prior to the Plantation of Ulster. The Jacksons in Ireland are the descendants of "settlers" in Ulster, who arrived in the Province during the Plantation of Ulster, in the seventeenth century. From the name, "John" developed the ever popular "Jacks," which gave us "Jackson" or "most often referenced to as "son of Jack".

Lince. Dutch or German: from a short form of the personal name Laure(i)ns. Spelling variations; Lence, Lents, Lints, Lintz.

Munn. This name is an ancient Norman name that may have arrived in England after the Norman Conquest of 1066. First, found in Kent where they were rooted around Headcorn, in that Shire. Many variations have occurred due to Old and Middle English lacked definite spelling rules.

Palmer. From the Middle English and Old French palmer or paumer, taken from palme meaning, "palm tree." Palmer or Parmer was often a nickname for someone who had been on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land and brought back a palm branch as proof that they had actually made the journey.

Vegter. Roots are Dutch: Occupational name meaning 'fighter', denoting a professional champion or duelist, someone who fought duels for legal purposes, or one who fought for entertainment at fairs.

INTRODUCTION

In developing this Family Genealogical History, it has used collections of pictures, newspaper articles, everyday pieces of identification, library cards, military records, etc.; the family's lives have started to take shape into more than dates of birth and death. Locations of headstones have lead to real roads individuals have traveled, from farm sites that no longer exist, and one turned into a shopping mall. Cemeteries are now alone and abandoned, or homes sites lost or turned derelict.

This material shows some occupations or key events in the lives of the family lines. Where possible the family comes alive with hobbies or interest which made their lives and backgrounds part of our makeup and influence into our own personal growth.

Our parents, grandparents and generations back were people to admire, and maybe through this material it can bring a smile, questions and certainly pride of their accomplishments and lives!

A FAMILY ODYSSEY

To all the world America is known as the “great melting pot and a country of opportunity;” where people of different cultures have contributed to make America the great nation it is today. The current generations of natural-born Americans have again needed to anchor their roots and maintain that interest in their cultural origins. As we trace the Jackson line, we have found over 2,100 members running off in numerous cultural and social directions. The roots are English, Dutch, Scotch, Irish, and German. Our presence in the United States dates to around 1670, long before the Revolutionary War, with participation in historical population growth, and movement, war and incidents from the 1600’s forward. Our collection of photographs, newspaper clippings, obituary announcements, and other images are the visual evidence of the family, places and events in history. They provide links for generations, with valuable clues to what the family member’s life may have been in the past. However, like all clues in a mystery, these small pieces are part of the bigger puzzle of what makes up a family.

From our earliest days on the art of spinning tales within family folklore and bits or memorabilia, the stories told in a voice that is sometimes timeless and familiar. We all have common bonds we all share, moments both grand and commonplace, the humorous and the tragic, the life and struggles and triumphs that we each recognize. Lessons learned during lives spent are both common and yet so unique.

THE PATH TO AMERICA

As the 17th Century developed in Europe, two powerful countries, England and Netherlands pushed across the Atlantic Ocean on a search for new lands to exploit and settle. Their collision in the “New World” would decide the future of their descendents and where they landed in the new lands.⁴

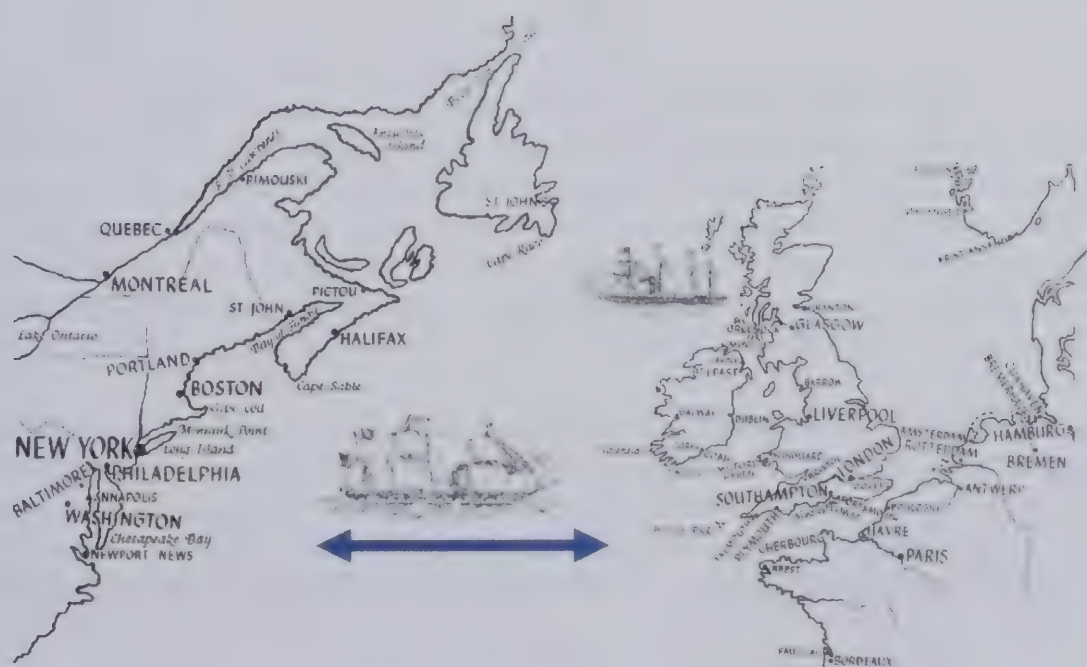

By the mid-1620s, after nearly a decade of trading with the Indians along the great river, discovered by Henry Hudson, the Dutch decided to establish a permanent presence at the southern end of what is today Manhattan Island. In its first few years, the tiny settlement was little more than a collection of log huts connected by dirt cart paths; a large warehouse in which furs and other trade items were stored; a church, and a handful of other structures. North of the settlement were open fields where sheep and cows grazed, and beyond that were dense woods and rocky outcroppings that extended all the way to the northern tip of the island. Relationships with the Indians were always tenuous, but controlled. Our early relatives, in the future colonies established themselves by 1660’s.

This family record and historical perspective attempts to provide identity and a basis for understanding how the family has interacted with larger historical change. British origins of the four main migration groups to America during the colonial period were the Puritans, Royalist, Quakers and the Scotch-Irish. This third group -- the first Quakers came primarily from England, but also from Wales and Ireland, and settled the Delaware Valley areas of the current states of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and early Delaware area. They carry the base of the Jackson presence in early America.

Each of the four migration groups represented a different era, and identified as unique and separate cultural groups, not only by their ethnic origins, religious beliefs, or traditional folkways, but also by the period in which they migrated to America. There was some overlapping of the migrations at the time they came to America was no accident of history. Each represented a separate political era in England in which each group found them as oppressed, or at least, on the opposite political side in England.

Early persecution of Quakers, such as a middle-aged mother of six, hanged from a great elm tree on Boston Common in 1660 forced the group to seek lands safe to worship and live. Over one period of 17 years, from 1660 to 1677, one family sought freedom by trying to testify in the courts of Puritan authority. For their efforts, they were, jailed, pilloried and run out of town. The family eventually in 1685 moved with their families to New Jersey.⁵

THE JACKSON'S ARRIVE

The Society of Friends - the Quakers - originated in England circa 1646. Within five years, Quakerism had spread throughout the British Isles and to the American colonies. Although we associate Friends with Pennsylvania, there were Quaker meetings in New England and New Amsterdam by 1657. Quakers had been arriving in America as early as 1650. They were mostly wandering evangelists and missionaries and punished cruelly in Puritan and Anglican communities, just as they had been at home.⁶

There are recorded accounts of some Quakers put to death, in Massachusetts in the 1650s, for the crime of being a Quaker. Quaker meetings were held, as many as three times per week, and conducted not only for worship but also for the business of the community. Both, men and women attended worship meetings, although seated separately. However, business sessions were separated, into men and women's meetings. Business meetings were recorded, with log entries for subjects and the names of people involved in discussions, or to record a decision that had been made. Here is where as genealogists we first find the Jackson name recorded in the wealth of information about the Quakers, because a large number of the recorded logs have survived. To a genealogist, recorded Quaker meetings logs, which include marriage notices, represent the most important set of records for determining relationships.

The Quaker way changed over the years. Historians of Quakerism identify four stages the religious order went through. The first was the founding of the sect (ca 1646-66) when Quakerism tended to be radical, evangelical, and messianic. The second stage (ca 1666-1750) was the flowering period, when the Society of Friends became increasingly institutional, rational, progressive, and optimistic, enlightened, liberal, and actively involved in the world without losing its godly purposes. The third stage (ca 1750-1827) was an era when Quakers turned inward upon themselves and grew increasingly sectarian, exclusive, and perfectionist. A fourth stage of denominational division followed the Hicksite separation of 1827.

"I wonder where my interest and abilities come from as you grow and start developing careers and skills. Why was my father a pilot, mechanic and an accomplished engineering inspector? How was two of my grandfathers and one great-grandfather a railroad engineer? Did I mimic their careers or is it genetic. Francis Jackson in 1676 was a carpenter, he used this skill to come to America and start a new life, family and a line of farmers, and skilled family, which has continued on to this day."

⁶ Hugh Barbour, Quaker Crosscurrents: Three Hundred Years of the New York Yearly Meetings: Syracuse University Press, 1995

In the year 1333, in London England, a group of carpenters founded their own organization. They called it the Carpenters' Guild of London and it is now one of the oldest existing social institutions in Great Britain. In becoming a carpenter five hundred centuries ago, his learning took place in an entirely different setting than it would today. Young men of a craft often learned by cultural experience; they served as apprentices from a very early age and learned by watching, doing, imitating, working. The contemporary teacher may find this long used, historical model of teaching very effective: the master artisan, acting as role model, teaches and explains his trade in a "do as I do" fashion to his apprentices. Craft workers who knew a trade well, and had their own shops were, masters. Craftsmen who knew a craft, but not as well as a master, was considered a journeyman. He worked at a daily wage for a master. A boy or young man who was learning a craft was an apprentice. He usually received housing and meals from the master who was teaching him. It took an apprentice from two to seven years to become a journeyman. A journeyman who wanted to become a master had to show evidence of great skill. He would pass an examination or make a product in his craft that would be judged by a masterpiece by the other masters of his guild.⁷

In America guilds, of carpenters and cordwainers, cabinetmakers and cobblers made their appearance, often temporary, in various cities along the Atlantic seaboard of colonial America. Workers played a significant role in the struggle for independence; carpenters disguised as Mohawk Indians were the "host" group at the Boston Tea Party in 1773. The Continental Congress met in Carpenters Hall in Philadelphia, and signed the Declaration of Independence in 1776.⁸

There are many families with the Jackson name in the early part of "New Amsterdam", later "New York", and Long Island area of New England. Their families came from England at different periods, our research and investigations still are looking for the connecting link. The earliest recorded time that Francis Jackson's name was recorded in 1669 in the tax rolls of Monmouth County, New Jersey. In the "History of Monmouth and Ocean Counties", the Jackson name is well recorded from 1675 into the name of Benjamin Jackson, father of Jesse Jackson, who settled both Michigan and Indiana as a farming pioneer.

History of Monmouth and Ocean Counties (1890)

Jackson - Francis Jackson, carpenter, bought in 1675, Hugh Dikeman's share of land. He (Dikeman) was attorney for Christopher Allmy 1684. In 1686 a warrant for land was granted by Proprietors to Francis Jackson; also January, 1687, for 179 acres and March, 1687, for 100 acres. In 1694 he bought land of Hannaniah Gilford. He (Francis Jackson) was court crier 1683-84. In 1696, he was witness to a deed between Thomas Cook and Thomas Webley. He d. about 1698, as in that year Samuel Leonard was administrator to his estate. He left children William, Mary, Elizabeth aged 12 years and Francis Jackson, Jr., aged 13 months. It is probable that his wife died shortly before he did as the last named child was given to the care of Francis Borden and Jane his wife, and the administrator was directed to pay for its care: the dau. Elizabeth was also given in care of Francis Borden, who may have been related. The son William was placed with George Allen to learn the weaver's trade; the dau. Mary was placed with John Worthy and Elizabeth his wife. Francis had bequest in a will of Francis Borden, 1703. In old Shrewsbury township, among taxpayers in 1761 Benjamin Jackson, William Jackson and son, William Jackson, Jr. In 1776 Henry and Richard Jackson lived in Freehold. Edwin Jackson, an aged citizen of Toms River, who lived at one time on the Salter Place on the bay, d. Oct. 30, 1883, at 93 years. In 1815, March 21, Joseph Salter and w. Rachel deeded this land to Nathaniel Jackson, Edwin Jackson and Joseph Jackson for $6,500, beginning at mouth of Dillon's Island Creek, along Toms River 65 chains, refers to Ezekiel's Creek; one thousand acres; also one-third of a swamp: refers to house where one Stout lives formerly James Mott's. In Massachusetts there was and is a Jackson family of considerable prominence. The history and genealogy of the family which has been published and the name Francis occurs in this family in almost every generation. On Long Island a Jackson family, of which Robert Jackson of Southhold. 1643, was the founder, has been quite noted. A sketch of this family is given in Thompson's History of Long Island, vol. 2, p. 37. William Jackson is named in Court records 1716 to 1718 and thereabouts. His eldest dau. is referred to in John Hulett's will 1736. In 1698 a Jackson came into court and chose George Curlies his guardian; his first name is not clearly written in court records, but it was probably Hugh and the date being the same year that Francis Jackson d. lends to the inference that he was the eldest son of the last named. In 1719 Hugh Jackson bought land from Nicholas Brown of Burlington county, "his loving brother-in-law," land in Monmouth. He is also called brother-in-law by Nicholas Potter in a deed 1729. Another Hugh Jackson of a succeeding generation, and w. Mary, had children: Hugh, b. March 25, 1754, d. Feb. 12, 1834; William, Peter, Isaac, Joseph, Mary and Mercy. This line has been preserved.⁹

In 1817, Governor DeWitt Clinton envisioned a Canal from Buffalo, New York on the eastern shore of Lake Erie to Albany, New York on the upper Hudson River, a distance of almost 400 miles. Clinton convinced the State legislature to authorize $7 million for construction of the Canal 363 miles long, 40 feet wide and four feet deep. The Erie Canal proved to be the key that unlocked an enormous series of social and economic changes in America. The Canal spurred the first great westward movement of American settlers, gave access to the rich land and resources west of the Appalachian Mountains. At the beginning of the nineteenth century, the Allegheny Mountains were the Western Frontier. The Northwest Territories that would later become Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Ohio were rich in timber, minerals, and fertile land for farming. The Erie Canal was opened in 1825, and the effect of the Canal was immediate and dramatic and settlers poured west, with the Canal still functioning today.¹⁰

With the treaty of peace with Britain, Quaker migration north and west began in earnest. In the 1780s, when this part of New York State was still Indian land, Quakers were beginning settlement in Upper Canada (now Ontario). The first Friends in western New York as settlers were probably those from East Hoosack who arrived at Farmington in Ontario County in 1789. It helps to imagine the migration of Quakers from Long Island and the lower Hudson up the Hudson River and then eastward into Vermont, west across New York State and north into Canada. Many western New York Friends came from Dutchess County, via Vermont or Canada. A smaller number of Quakers came from New England along the Hudson River route. About a third of the members of Scipio Monthly Meeting in Cayuga County came from the New Bedford, Massachusetts area. Friends from Pennsylvania and New Jersey also came to Western New York. In the 1830s, many local Quakers caught "Michigan Fever" and heading further west. One Quaker meeting in Niagara County moved as a body to the Raisin River in Michigan, taking the minute books of their meeting with them.¹¹ The nineteenth century was a period of religious controversy and Friends were not immune. In the 1820s, differences about doctrine and disciplinary practices resulted in a schism, which split most of the yearly meetings in North America. Both sides maintained that they represented the ancient testimonies of the Society of Friends. The labels generally used to differentiate the two branches are "Hicksite" and "Orthodox". Hicksite Friends were worried that Orthodox brethren were trying to enforce too much uniformity of belief and that they were trying to write a creed for Quakerism. Orthodox Friends were worried that some of their Hicksite brethren were straying into unbelief and deism.¹²

Biography 1885: Jesse Jackson, deceased, was among the first settlers of Butler Township. He was born in Howell, Monmouth County, N. J., in 1795 a son of Benjamin Jackson, of English descent. Reared on a farm and received a limited education in the common schools. When a young man he went to New York, and was there married about 1815 to Edith Smith. In 1833, he moved to Hillsdale County, Michigan and in 1837 to DeKalb County, Indiana, and settled in the southwest corner of Butler Township, entering 120 acres of land from the Government. He built a small cabin, and began clearing his farm, which he made his home the rest of his life. He and his wife were members of the Society of Hicksite Friends, and devout adherents to the faith. He was successful in his business enterprises, and was widely known, and had many friends who appreciated his manly character and sterling integrity.¹³

DISCOVER YOUR SCOTS-IRISH ANCESTORS

"Since the Colonial period, one of America's most interesting ethnic groups has been the Scottish people who, in the 16th and 17th centuries, answered the call of leases for land in the northern counties of Ireland, known as Ulster, before immigrating en masse to America in the 18th century. Their distinct—some might even say stubborn—sense of independence has hurled them to and beyond the US frontier and even shows up in what to call the group.

While Americans have often called them "Scots-Irish," these fervent Protestants began adopting the term "Ulster Scots" in the mid-1800s to separate themselves from the generally Roman Catholic Irish immigrants arriving on American shores in droves. (For those not using the term Ulster Scots today, Scots-Irish has generally supplanted the use of "Scotch-Irish" in America).

Their two-step immigration process—first to Ulster and then to America, separated by a century or two—complicates Scots-Irish research, as do record losses and in some cases, a simple lack of a record-keeping tradition. But despite these difficulties, you can find a bagpipe full of records, documents and methodologies to track down the ancestry of these wandering, pioneering Ulster Scotsmen.

From Scotland to Ireland - What led to the planting of ethnic Scots in Northern Ireland begins with England's historic desire to dominate Ireland. As early as the 12th century, English kings had made attempts to interfere with areas of Ireland.

Fast-forward to the 1500s, when England's Tudor Dynasty, principally Henry VIII and his daughter Elizabeth I, made it a mission to bring Ireland under their control. The resistance was aggravated by England's participation in the Protestant Reformation juxtaposed against Ireland's continued adherence to the Catholic pope. When Scottish King James VI became King James I of England in 1603, the Anglo-Irish relationship really became interesting. Scotland had also embraced the Reformation, but its established Church of Scotland was Presbyterian, not the Anglican Church of England (forerunner of the Episcopalian church in America).

Parts of Ireland, especially in the northern area known as Ulster, were depopulated after the earlier wars against the Tudors, and James I had a solution: Take land from Irish nobles and give it to some of his cronies, who then would invite tenant settlers called “undertakers” from the lowlands of Scotland – just 20 miles away across the North Channel of the Irish Sea.

The land allotments appealed to these Scottish Lowlanders for a few reasons: Their own land on the border of England and Scotland had been at war for seven centuries; and a change in land tenure rules had dispossessed many from their traditional lands. Some English from the England-Scotland border area also chose to settle in Ulster.

Beginning in 1609, this “plantation” of Ulster quickly grew to thousands of people. Historical Ulster contained nine counties: three – Cavan, Donegal and Monaghan – stayed part of the Republic of Ireland, and six – Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry and Tyrone – make up Northern Ireland. Each conflict and Irish rebellion attracted more Scots to Ireland and famine in Scotland in the 1690’s also led many to Ulster.

From Ireland to America, two major factors precipitated mass migration from the Ulster area to the American colonies in the 1710s. First, a “rack rent” crisis happened when absent landlords sought large increases to renew the 20-year leases of many 1690s emigrants from Scotland. Thousands were evicted from their farms and lands. Second, the Presbyterians in Ulster were as politically disadvantaged as the first Irish Catholics. Under British rule, only people who belonged to the Church of Ireland, the branch of the Anglican Church in Ireland had the potential for any political rights.

When added to occasional droughts in Ulster, these factors turned a trickle of Scots-Irish emigration into an open movement. Some 250,000 are thought to have come between 1717 and the beginning of the American Revolution. More than a million Scots-Irish would come to America in the 19th century.

After a first wave from 1717 to 1718, the Colonial era saw four more such movements. The swells in the late 1710s and from 1725 to 1729 centered upon Pennsylvania. As early as the 1740s, when the next great wave occurred, a number of Scots-Irish went into Virginia and into the Carolinas. A limited number also came to New England. This new American frontier allowed the Scots-Irish to realize their quest for land ownership; they viewed land as the only true wealth.¹⁴

ULSTER EMIGRATION

When the house of Hanover ascended the throne of England, the adherents of the house of Stewart were still numerous and influential in Scotland. When the rebellion of 1715, which had for its object the placing of Prince James, son of James II, on the Scottish throne, broke out, the ancestors of the Gailey's were living in the island of Bute. Being staunch Presbyterians, and in politics Whigs, they supported the house of Hanover and the Protestant succession, and opposed the claims of the Stewarts and the schemes of the Jacobites. "About the time and beginning of the reign of George I three brothers (the Gailey's); perhaps owing to the disturbed state of Scotland at the time, removed from the island of Bute to Northern Island".¹⁵

Some movements have sometimes been loosely referred to as clearances; there were several actual clearance campaigns in Scotland and in Ireland, conducted either directly by the English / British Crown or by substantial landowners on with the tacit support of a benign government. What were the aims of the plantations? King James the First hoped that the people who came over to the Ulster Province during the Plantation would help him to change the province.¹⁶ Plantation was not a new idea but followed a number of earlier attempts to settle people in Ireland. There was a mainly English Plantation in the mid-16th Century when Queen Elizabeth I wanted lands settled and sought to curb the growing friendship between the Scottish McDonnell in North Antrim and France. There were several attempts including one by Sir Thomas Smith to settle the Ards in County Down in 1572. Thousands of Scottish people went to Ulster with the Plantation and thus was born the Scotch - Irish / Ulster Scot. In 1649 -50, there was another major redistribution of lands when Cromwell offered land in lieu of wages to his soldiers - many took the offer and sold the lands on without themselves even visiting their allotment.

In later years many of these Scots - Irish and the indigenous Irish people, who were badly treated in so many ways, subsequently emigrated to the USA and Canada. Although history and romantic fiction tend to focus on the Highland Clearances in Scotland, they were affected across the whole of Scotland; evicting, if not wiping out, the resident Highlander, Lowlander or Borderer populations. Similarly, the massive movement of people from Ireland before, during and after the potato blight and consequent famine (the Great Hunger) of the 1840s has attracted much interest; sometimes obscuring substantial but otherwise routine movements at other times.

As well as political discontent, this first movement of emigration also had economic causes. The majority of Ulster Presbyterians were poor small holders, artisans, weavers and laborers, and these were most vulnerable both to the succession of natural disasters - crop failures, smallpox epidemics, livestock diseases - which recurred throughout the eighteenth century, and to the increasing commercialization of Ulster, with the constant efforts of landlords to increase the profitability of their lands by raising rents. The increasing importance of the linen trade was also influential, and the numbers of emigrants rose and fell as this trade prospered or faltered. The very nature of the business facilitated emigration, since the ships, which brought flaxseed from America often, returned with a cargo of emigrants. Before 1720, the stream of migrants across the Atlantic was slow but steady, with New England the favored destination. After that date, the rate of emigration grew, with a peak in late 1720s and a decline in the 1730s, when relative prosperity returned to Ulster. The famine of 1740-1741 gave a sharp impetus to the renewal of emigration, which rose steadily through the 1760s, when more than 20,000 people left from the Ulster ports of Newry, Port Rush, Belfast, Larne and Ferry.

Although more than a quarter of the population of Ireland in the eighteenth century was Protestant, the Anglo-Irish Anglicans formed a minority of this number. It was the Ulster settlers and their descendants, overwhelmingly Presbyterian (as was the Gailey's), who were in the majority. The Penal Laws designed as they were to protect the privileges of the members of the Church of Ireland, disenfranchise and discriminated against Presbyterians as well as Catholics, though the effects for the Presbyterians were mitigated to some extent by their superior economic strength and the tight-knit communities in which they lived. Nonetheless, to a people who had fled Scotland originally to escape religious persecution, the impositions of the Penal Laws were intolerable. This was reflected in the rebellion of 1798, but also in emigration from Ulster to America. This was the start of a process, which had far-reaching consequences. Up to then, the movement of peoples had been into Ireland. Now began the long exodus! The migration reached a climax in the years 1770 to 1774, when at least 30,000 people departed. Over the course of the whole century, the estimate is more than 400,000 emigrated from Ulster; the vast majority to North America; in 1790, the number of the United States population of Irish stock has been estimated to be 447,000, two-thirds originating from Ulster.

"The Act of Union in 1800 saw Ireland enters into a subordinate relationship with England, in not only aspects of social and political policy but also more importantly, the economic relationship, which commenced was to have a devastating effect on the indigenous population. The lack of employment led to ambitions towards emigration, while the social conditions prevalent would not have encouraged many to remain. The land contained very little pastureland, while in tillage production of potatoes was the general preparation crop throughout a parish, rotated with barley, flax and oats. The potato had come to dominate the daily diet so expense was slight, that farmer's diets comprised of potatoes, milk, butter, seldom consumption of any animal food.

Farms were of unclosed naturally, generally consisting of 20 acres but following the practice prevailing throughout the country, "there were also numerous small subletting of 2 or 3 acres called cottar-tracks". The farms were unable to provide enough employment.

Some of them were without even the smallest piece of land and the amount held by the most fortunate was entirely inadequate to support them, even in seasons when crops were bountiful." It was a custom to encourage a married son to continue residing with his parents rather than build a new home: the preferred option for any available money was that of obtaining more land. There was also a tendency towards early marriage, reinforced by the cheapness of rearing a child.

The Gailey's were rooted with the Presbyterians of Ulster, 19th Century emigration was viewed as following the foot-steps of their fore-fathers, away from religious, social, economic, and political persecution to the land of equality and opportunity, Presbyterians sought relief by emigration to America at the time sought the favorable opportunity of securing a sufficient subsistence in Canada. Their ancestors had come to Ireland under the English Monarchy, who had guaranteed them their religious and political liberties, in return for serving the King's Royal Garrison in the midst of his Papist enemies, which proved to be as great a burden as did Scotland.

It was early in the 19th century that the British Government openly admitted that Ireland could only completely transform into an economically subordinate supplier of raw material for the British market, if the population declined by means of emigration. Emigration was the only means to rectify the country's economic backwardness, social turbulence and a means of ridding Ireland of the many potato plots, which stunted the progress of capitalistic agriculture.

To regulate the mass exodus to the United States and to diversify the flow to British Canada, the Government enforced the Passengers Act of 1816. The resulting carriage restrictions and increased fares made Canada a much cheaper option by far.

Locally reports the Government made encouragement of emigration by liberal promises to the farmers, offering them free passage, the conveyance of their belongings and on arrival in Upper Canada, a grant of one hundred acres of land and provisions, gratis for the first year. Between 1815 and 1845, "well over a million emigrants left Ireland which quickly became established as a major supplier of overseas labor." "There were young people sent out of Ireland in the charge of an older family, with the hope of reaching relatives already established there. This was done in an effort to save the children's lives; parents remained at home and paid the passage for the children."

The total number of emigrants from the United Kingdom in 1830 amounted to 28,100, from Ireland, 17,596. The proportion of persons of the latter description in 1829, was considerably smaller, while in the present year, 1830, out of an emigration exceeding 28,000, it is pretty nearly ascertained that not more than 6,500 passed through the Canada's, and finally settled in the United States. During this period, the three sons of Joseph Gailey became part of this line of emigration.

The emigration of Irish farmers not only allowed capitalist agriculture at home but also would in Canada and America; provide the much-needed labor to transform the colonial territory and the emerging west, into productive areas. Skilled and semi-skilled individuals with entrepreneurial ambitions in fact undertook pre-famine emigration to America and Canada. For them, the New World offered abundance and opportunity.

The Port of Derry established itself as an emigration port after the War of Independence and served the neighboring counties of Derry, Donegal and Tyrone; and to a lesser degree Antrim and Fermanagh. However, in the first half of the 19th century Canada became the principle destination for Derry emigrants, growing again because of the Passengers Act of 1803 and the commercial links forged in the timber trade.¹⁷

"It was the dream of economic prosperity that lured the Irish to America. Newspapers aided in this vision, describing it as the land of milk and honey, where the streets were paved with gold.

You have to realize that for the vast majority of 19th century emigrants, that a return ticket was never purchased. The custom of the American Wake exemplifies this fact, as the century progressed so too did the generations, as the older generations died on both sides of the Atlantic, younger generations not personally knowing each other, stopped corresponding with those left behind in Ireland."¹⁸

When traveling in Dublin, Ireland (1997), and checking at the genealogy center, on the Gailey name, I handed the spelling to the clerk to be checked. The clerk looked at the paper quickly handed it back and said "I can't help you it's not Irish it's "plantation"! For years we always thought we were pure Irish, but the family name was Scottish!

Which means the family probably came from Northern Ireland (Ulster), and fits the information given on the Gunn Clan located in Northern Scotland, which includes the name Gailey? Research indicates that Gailey was a sept of the clan Gunn, of Norse origin, whose Scottish homeland was in the northern counties of Caithness and Sutherland in Scotland.

The authenticity that the family of the Gailey's is of Scotch origin, and belonged to a Highland Clan, the Chieftain of which was Buchanan still is open. Buchanan, it would appear, could be the original name of the family, but for the success of one of the family in a tournament, and the flowery profusion of the spot on which the victory was achieved, they were henceforth called by the name of Gay-Lea or Gealy. Such is the oldest spelling of the name. In the license of the Rev. Daniel Gealey, an e is inserted before the y. The American branches have adopted the spelling "Gayley," and those in Ireland "Gailey," around the early 1800's.¹⁹ Therefore the Gailey family and name is traditionally Irish having come from Northern Ireland. Due to political, economic and religious unrest many families from that area came to America. Very simply they were Scottish peoples who migrated to the ancient Province of Ulster and from there immigrated to the old Colonies of England. Of the three brothers, from Scotland, one settled near Letterkenny, County Donegal, and the two others in County Tyrone; one at Killenure, near Omagh, the other in the Parish of Ardstaw.

Sometime around 1832, the Gailey brothers (James, Samuel and Alexander) moved from the County Donegal and County Tyrone area to Canada and into Vermont and New York states. Their father Joseph Gailey removed to America in May of 1849 or 1850 (as noted in "FAMILY RECORDS of the GAILEYS, and some of their connections - 1870)", and is listed in the 1850 Federal Census, as living with Alexander Gailey (his son) in, Luzerne, Warren Co., at the age 86, and having been married. He shows up again living with another son, James Gailey in the 1855, in Luzerne, Warren Co., New York state census. He was born in Ireland and noted as a widowed alien at this time, with six years residence, and died between 1855 and 1860.²⁰

Scotch - Irish is the North American titles, and known elsewhere as the Ulster Scots. In U.S. and Canada, they are mainly associated with the Ulstermen who settled in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries and who played a large part in settling the wilderness, service in the American Revolution and the foundation of the United States. We can determine that in our ancestors there is an element of both original Irish, England and Scottish planters. There is more cross breeding in Ulster's history than people imagined. The problem is there is not a registrar of names. In general, terms the spelling of a surname is often a guide to ancestors, and is a considered starting point.

Gailey is a Sept of Clan Gunn.

Warren County is located in the heart of the Adirondack Mountains, an hour's drive north of Albany, New York, and the state capital. Warren County is rich in historical color. From Fort William Henry in Lake George, which played a crucial part in America's fight for Independence, to Cooper's Cave, in the Glens Falls area, where James Fennimore Cooper based the novel "The Last of the Mohicans". In today's world, not only is Warren County a vacationing Mecca with colorful scenery to view because of its many lakes and majestic mountains, it is also a treasure of information for the person looking to find his ancestral roots.

The three Gailey brothers repeated the "Diasporas" from Ireland, having been part of the Ulster Plantation system living in County Donegal and County Tyrone area. They made their way to America, but not all three appear to come at the same time. It is a very good assumption that they first traveled to Canada, then crossed into Maine, Vermont, and then into New York state. Some of the Ramsey family had entered the U.S. from Canada via Maine and Vermont and then moved on into New York State. Alexander lived in Vermont and married a Dublin, Ireland girl, Catherine Ramsey. They married in mid-1838. The Ramsey family all seem to end up in Lake Luzerne, as did the Gailey's; Irish families' settling in around each other was not unusual.

"Alexander Gailey is listed as a land owning farmer, settled Luzerne in 1840".²¹ Mr. Gailey was a Naturalized citizen and a 15-year resident, in 1855. His wife Catharine Ramsey, born in Ireland is also buried with him in Lake Luzerne, Warren Co., New York. They are interned at the Old Methodist Cemetery, on East River Road (River Road Cemetery). The Old Methodist Cemetery is located 3.2 miles north of the intersection of Mill and Wall Streets on the east side of River Rd (Upper Hudson River). Enclosed on three sides by field stone walls and on the front by a four pipe fence with a gate, this is one of the two oldest cemeteries in the northern part of Lake Luzerne. There are a number of unmarked graves and a few marked with field stones, the cemetery is maintained by the Town of Lake Luzerne and well kept. Recently found evidence would indicate that this was originally a Dutch Reformed Church Cemetery.

There is a location in New York State called Gailey Hill (Take the New York State thruway to 87 North, to Lake George. Exit at 21 and bear left. Make a left turn at the light (9N); follow 9N past Lake Luzerne campgrounds to Gailey Hill Road. Gailey Hill is also the location of Gailey Hill School, District No.2 and one of the Gailey farms.

The Town of Lake Luzerne is the southernmost town in Warren County and is called the "Gateway to the Adirondacks". It was first settled in 1767. Originally called Fairfield when it was formed in 1792 from the town of Queensbury, it was renamed Luzerne in April 6, 1808, in honor of the French nobleman, Chevalier de la Luzerne, who aided the American cause in the War for Independence. In 1963 it was renamed Town of Lake Luzerne.

William Abner Gailey was born in (1865) New York State, moved to Michigan and certainly as a young man worked, trained and became a Railroad Engineer for the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad system. The Grand Rapids and Indiana had a station in Tustin, Michigan with the Edgett family living on a farm within a mile of the railroad. He meets and married Lydia Edgett in April of 1891. This all seems logical, that the two met and became close friends, married and lived there for approximately four years before moving to Cadillac, Michigan. William and Lydia had three children; Crosby Abner my Grandfather was born (1892) in Tustin, Michigan with one sister Alice M. Gailey (1894). One other sister Florence B. Gailey (1896) was born in Cadillac, Michigan.

Crosby Abner Gailey – Family Oral History: A Changed Man

Crosby A. Gailey, born in Tustin, in the State of Michigan, aged Twenty-One years and six months, and by occupation a Laborer, voluntarily enlisted on the Twenty-Eighth day of October 1910, as a soldier in the Army of the United States of America, returned to Michigan to work for the railroads. The first road established in Osceola County was 1855 and ran through the wilderness from Big Rapids to Hersey. Prior to that date the Muskegon River was used as means of transportation. In 1872 the Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad was completed across Osceola County and ran from east to west. The Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad was completed later that year and

"ONE KILLED, TWO HURT AS TRAIN STRIKES TRUCK"

Robert Griffin, Battle Creek Engineer, Loses Life in Edwardsburg Crash.

Edwardsburg, Feb. 9 - Train No. 46 of the Grand Truck, traveling at 50 miles an hour through here late Thursday afternoon, struck the truck of Clarence Barringer at the town crossing, derailing the train and resulting in the death of Robert Griffin, Battle Creek, veteran engineer, and seriously injuring Crosby Gailey, 28, fireman, and Barringer. The engine turned completely over.

Trainmaster H.C. White, who was aboard, Conductor J. H. Blivvens, Baggage Master A. T. Mitchell and passengers escaped with a severe shaking up. An unidentified rider on the fender, who spent the night at the county jail and boarded the train when it stopped at Cassopolis, luckily jumped as the engine tumbled over and escaped injury.

Dr. H. A. Hugher attended Fireman Gailey and the truck driver, while awaiting ambulances from South Bend.

Barringer was unconscious when picked up by station hands 100 yards from the crossing. Eye witnesses say he heard the whistle of the flier and applied his brakes. His brakes either failed to take hold, or the tires slipped on the ice, allowing the front of his heavy Packard car to cross the track when the train reached it. The impact tore the front wheels off, jamming them into the platform of the farmer's elevator nearby, and wrecking this.

Fireman Gailey, extricated from the wreckage, regained consciousness under Dr. Hughes treatment. He lay in the station, suffering agony and smoking cigarettes incessantly to keep his "nerve" while awaiting ambulance speeding from South Bend.

Barringer sustained a broken arm, injuries about the head, and possible internal injuries, but the doctor said he has chances for recovery. Gailey's injuries were about his head and body. He too, Dr. Hughes said, had a chance for recovery.

Justice of Peace Eber Reynolds, Cassopolis, as acting coroner, empanelled a jury to sit at the inquest into the death of Griffin. The jurors are Jerome Wilkinson, John Hayen, Bart Clark, M. Tuitt, Niel Heustek and Henry Runkle, all of Edwardsburg.

DRINK CRAZED RAIL FIREMAN (ENGINEER) KILLS HIMSELF

After Farewell To Wife, Gailey sends Bullet Through Brain

Remorseful, despondent and with mind befuddled by a hangover resulting from an all night "bust", Crosby A. Gailey, 37 year old Grand Trunk Fireman (Engineer) handed his wife his watch, bade her good bye and ascending the stairs of his, 229 Jamison Street, Brownlee Park sent a bullet crashing through his brain. The suicide, which occurred at 8:45 this morning, orphaned five small children.

Gailey's body was found lying in a pool of blood in the bathroom a few minutes after the shooting by a neighbor summoned by Mrs. Gailey when she heard her husband's body fall to the floor. Police and sheriff's officers, called to the scene, found a 32-caliber Colt revolver, the instrument of death, under Gailey's body.

Coroner Carl Gray, investigating the case this morning, announced that no inquest will be held.

Mrs. Gailey in her story to police said she could attribute no motive for her husband's act. She related, however, that he had been away from home during most of the night, returning in an intoxicated condition early this morning. It is believed that remorse came with sobriety this morning.

RAILROADER MANY YEARS

Gailey was employed for the past 14 years at the Grand Trunk and during the major part of this time has been a fireman. He also served as an extra-engineer and had membership in the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

It was he who about six years ago, miraculously escaped death in a railroad accident at Edwardsburg, Mich. in which Engineer Robert Griffin, Urbandale, and well-known locally was killed. Gailey saved his own life in that case by jumping from the locomotive just before it crashed into a truck at a crossing.

Although he escaped with his life in the accident, he received a head injury from the jump, which according to fellow employees, made him slightly mentally unbalanced at times. This condition police intimated may have caused his suicide this morning.

TOLD WIFE "GOOD-BYE."

In her story to police following the tragedy, Mrs. Gailey told of waking about 5 a.m. today and of finding her husband downstairs in a somewhat intoxicated condition. "He had left the house about 9 o'clock last night and when he didn't come back I thought he must be drinking. I didn't say much to him this morning because he was usually ugly after he had been drinking.

She told of watching him leave the house and of his returning again shortly after 8:30. Coming into the kitchen, he bade her "Good-bye" once more and this time went directly up stairs. A few minutes later, she said, she heard this body fall to the floor.

NEIGHBOR FINDS BODY

Running to a neighbor's house, Mrs. Gailey summoned Thomas Briggs, who went up stairs and found the body. Clair Avery, living at the Briggs home accompanied Briggs and later called police.

In typical Gailey family style while I was growing up, no one would talk about my grandfather "Crosby Abner Gailey" and his committing suicide. This fact truly came home to me one day when I was sharing some genealogy facts with my cousin, and said "that Crosby died from a self inflicted wound". My cousin was so surprised that he called his Mother and asked if it was true! During that time people seemed to think suicide was a major flaw in one's family genes and was not to be discussed. During recent reading in a January 2010 Smithsonian magazine I discovered that "a great deal of 20th century cognitive neuroscience can be understood by the analysis of the remarkable case of Phineas Gage".²³ In 1848, Gage, 25, was the foreman of a crew cutting a railroad bed in Cavendish, Vermont. On September 13, as he was using a tamping iron to pack explosive powder in to a hole, the powder detonated. The tamping iron – 43 inches long, 1.25 inches in diameter and weighing 1.25 pounds – shot skyward, penetrated Gage's left cheek, ripped into his brain and exited through his skull, landing several dozen feet away.

His name has been etched into history by preservation through the doctor's observation efforts that treated him, with his friends finding him "no longer Gage". Doctor Harlow wrote Gage's balance between his "intellectual faculties and animal propensities" seemed gone. "His contractors, who regarded him as the most efficient and capable foreman in their employ previous to his injury, considered the change in his mind so marked that they could not give him his place again. This character change consisted of low intellectual faculties, could not stick to a plan, the grossest profanity, little deference for his fellow workers, he became ill-tempered and a shiftless drunk. Thus, the damage to Gage's frontal cortex had resulted in a complete loss of social inhibitions, which often led to inappropriate behavior. A number of Crosby A. Gailey traits tracked Gage's.

I have been told that Crosby had a plate placed in his head which lead to major headaches and depression. My feeling is with the current understanding of this injury type and treatment his life would have been considerably improved and his character would have been that of a normal contributor in the family and society.²⁴

PEDIGREE TIES TO THE OTHER FAMILIES

It is a little known fact that one in three immigrants to America was not English. The next three largest social groups were Dutch, German, and Ulster-Scots. The fabric of America influenced by the cultures that many of the societal traits they brought with them were even in those early years, considered uniquely American.

The busy industriousness, fastidious and no nonsense approach to life of the immigrants from Holland have remained to this day. The German attention to detail and sense of belonging fueled the feeling of pride that motivated the upstart colonials to finish what they started in the face of daunting odds. The Scots-Irish brought with them a devil-may-care attitude that inspired a kind of bravery and daring courage, which was a legacy of years of being the cultural underdog, which could never quite be subdued.

The long line of family ties includes the Cool, Foss, Munn, Lawson and Edgett all contributing lines of history and long interesting tales to the Jackson's. In addition there are strong English (Edgett, Lawson and Munn), Scottish-Irish (Gailey), German (Cool and Foss) and Dutch (Bronkhorst) lines which add additional European lineages to the bloodlines of generations of the youngest families. Long lines of Dutch have lived in New York State and the island of Manhattan in the mid-1600's pushing our family roots back further than 1676.

ENGLISH EMIGRATION TO MICHIGAN

Unlike other groups of emigrants, a large number of the English people who went to America stayed in agriculture. A census in 1890 revealed those 90,000 farmers and well over 100,000 farm laborers in the United States had been born in England.

While most settled in America, a number of skilled craftsmen remained itinerant, returning to England after a season of two of work, several of the early 1850 group of Munn's did make return trips to the Kent County, England area. Because British governments were initially preoccupied with emigration as a means of relieving distress, interpretations have tended to rest, precariously, on generalizations that English emigration was the product of economic dislocation. The dearth of historical studies is most striking if we note that, between 1853 and 1930, the English contributed over nine million emigrants to the European Diasporas.²⁵

THE MUNN'S

George Munn married Mary Ann Tarrant, of whose family we have no record other than that her mother was French. They were married at Headcorn, Kent Co., England. It is uncertain whether his occupation in England was farming (Agricultural Laborer). Eight children were born to them there, the second child, Thomas, dying at the age of 9 months, and the oldest daughter, Betsey at the age of 16 years.

In the spring of 1856, with the family of six other children, they embarked on a sailing vessel for America. After a six weeks voyage, in which they encountered many perils and hardships, and during severe storms, were more than once in danger of shipwreck, they reached New York. They migrated to Michigan and settled near the village of Plainwell. Soon after this, they purchased the farm west of Plainwell where they spent the remainder of their lives. Here the youngest son, Edward, was born.

The Munn's were respected and honored citizens of the community, and as was usual of pioneer families were always ready to help, where needed. In addition to their own large family, Mr. and Mrs. Munn raised to manhood Charles Almon Munn, their grandson (son of John and Helen (Alexander) Munn), whose mother died when he was a month old, and who was left fatherless at the age of three years.

By people who knew Mrs. Munn, she was called a 'lovely lady', and that is how the few grandchildren who remember her think of her. She must have measured up to the highest standards as a mother, because that name was often on the lips of her children. One of the loveliest memories of the grandchildren were the holidays spent in grandfather's home, and the box of pennies which were collected by grandmother during the year, and divided among the children at Christmas time.

George Munn died on April 20, 1892 of old age. He is buried in (Section 25-DD) Hillside Cemetery, Plainwell, Michigan. Mary Munn died on October 11, 1894 of old age; buried in Hillside Cemetery, Plainwell, Michigan.²⁶

DUTCH EMIGRATION ADD TO MICHIGAN ROOTS

Three diverse clergymen were the leaders of a large-scale immigration movement from the Netherlands to the United States in the 1840's. The impetus or trigger for the emigration is widely attributed to lack of religious freedom in the Netherlands, but the real impetus for the immigration movement was probably the very poor economic situation in the Netherlands at that time. The country was in a severe economic depression then, and the resultant extreme poverty was rampant, especially in rural areas. Of the three one traveled to Wisconsin, two other clergymen led a group of protestant Dutch to western Iowa, and a group of protestant Dutch to western Michigan.

Normally the group traveled on an uneventful voyage of 50 to 60 days, they would arrive in New York City (Jan Bronkhorst) listed on the ship "Centurion" as a passenger. The Centurion was a 'brig'. It left Rotterdam and arrived at New York harbor on July 15, 1847) and travel by way of the Hudson River to Troy, New York. From this port, transportation would be the Erie Canal to Buffalo, and sail across lakes Erie, Huron, and Michigan. If they did not sail around the lower peninsula of Michigan, because of winter weather, from Detroit they would take the Michigan Central Railroad west to the end of the line, Kalamazoo. The group settling in Michigan (Holland, Michigan), takes its name from the Dutch settlers who came to the area in the mid 1800s. They came to America seeking religious freedom and opportunity, and settled in this area as it reminded them of their homeland.²⁷

As immigrants arrived from the Netherlands, they settled in different localities, arranged and named as they are in the Netherlands. Thus, an emigrant situated with people of his same background. That is how the communities surrounding Holland, Michigan received the names of Zeeland, Vriesland, Drenthe, Overisel and Graafschap.²⁸

GERMAN EMIGRATION

Napoleon's invasion of 1806 resulted in a reduction of the number of independent Prussian "states" to 36. That was the status until Prussia, over a few decades, "united" those states and today's Germany formed in 1871. To properly direct, any genealogical inquiries, you must know more about the country and specific location your ancestor came from. Between 1668 and 1817 the country that is now called Germany was more than 300 independent states, city states, bishoprics, duchies, and more, some just a bit larger than a postage stamp, with the exceptions in size, places like Bavaria. There was no central government. Residents "belonged" to their little countries, which in some cases had two or more areas separated by other "countries". They received orders to populate an area and sent to start new towns, usually along a border, to ward off invasion. Most people worked in agriculture, for larger landowners as tenants.²⁹

It helps when doing German research to have an understanding of Prussian history, and what was happening during the critical emigration years of 1850-75, and that Prussia only officially controlled western Germany after 1871 as the First Reich. The term Prussia is a name applied, to almost 60% of the German Empire at one time or another. Our ancestors chose to leave everything familiar and to come to America for a variety of reasons, the most common being a combination of over-crowding, high taxes, nearly continual war, some crop failures and the potato famine spreading through Europe, religious matters, and to allow their children to avoid the new compulsory military service. Immigration in other parts of England and Europe coincided with the waves of Germans and central Europeans who fled to America after the failed revolutions of 1848.

Germans arrived in Canada and America during three broadly drawn periods:³⁰

- 1683 - 1820 This emigration was, largely caused by religious persecutions following from the changes wrought by the Thirty Years War, and by economic hardship in Europe. Many were Protestants from the Palatinate area of Germany.
- 1820 - 1871 Economic hardships, including those caused by unemployment, crop failure and starvation, was the primary cause of emigration during this period, in combination with wars and military service. Most of the emigrants came from Alsace-Lorraine, Baden, Hessen, Rhineland and Wurttemberg.
- 1871 - 1914 Emigration became more affordable during this period, as well as much more common. All areas of Germany contributed, including Prussia.
- The family names of Cool and Foss are both German in origin with research taking place for the exact location of birth and point of immigration. Foss is "Prussia" and the Cool family origin assumed to be possibly Palatine.

GAINING AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

The early beginnings of our deep cultural roots in the Old World! More Americans claim ancestry from European nations than from anywhere else in the world. Top ancestral origins, according to a Census 2000 survey places (in millions): Scottish=5.4, Polish=9.1, French=9.8, Italian=15.9, English=28.3, Irish=33.0 and German=46.5.

Naturalization is the process by which an alien becomes an American citizen. It is a voluntary act; naturalization is not required. From the first naturalization law passed by Congress in 1790 through much of the 20th century, an alien could become naturalized in any court of record. The names and types of courts vary from State to State. The names and types of courts have also varied during different periods of history – but may include the county supreme, circuit, district, equity, chancery, probate, or common pleas court.

³⁰ Finding Your German Ancestors: A Beginner's Guide, ISBN:0-916489-83-3, by Kevan Hanson

Congress passed the first law regulating naturalization in 1790. As a general rule, naturalization was a two-step process that took a minimum of five years. After residing in the United States for two years, an alien could file a "declaration of intent" (so-called "first papers") to become a citizen. After three additional years, the alien could "petition for naturalization." After the petition was granted, a certificate of citizenship was issued.

The first major exception was that "derivative" citizenship was granted to wives and minor children of naturalized men. From 1790 to 1922, wives of naturalized men automatically became citizens. This also meant that an alien woman who married a U.S. citizen automatically became a citizen. From 1790 to 1940, children under the age of twenty-one automatically became naturalized citizens upon the naturalization of their father. The second major exception to the general rule was that, from 1824 to 1906, minor aliens who had lived in the United States five years before their twenty-third birthday could file both their declarations and petitions at the same time.

Park-Bench Exile Sets Foot Again on United States Soil

Finally Untangles Red Tape That Kept Him from Nation Where He Voted 40 Years

After a month's exile, imposed by Governmental red tape, George Foss, sixty-five-year-old man without a country, Monday set foot again on the soil of the land he has chosen as his own. Despite the cold-blooded treatment he has received from this Nation, he will proceed to obtain citizenship as soon as he has learned "how much it costs."

"I don't lay it altogether to the Government." He said, speaking of the month he had spent on Windsor park benches while Canadian authorities negotiated for the visa that would enable him to return to the State where he had lived for more than 60 years. "I didn't like it, of course, but I guess it couldn't be helped."

He Finally Crosses River

Foss returned Monday from Canada on a permit forwarded to Immigration Director John L. Zurbrick from Washington, allowing the exile to apply for a visa. He came to Detroit by bus in the company of Mrs. Gertrude Whiteside, secretary to Mayor David A. Croll, of Windsor, who was largely instrumental in accomplishing Foss' return.

Foss' troubles began when he visited a son, Glenn, an American war veteran who had taken a homestead in Alberta. Foss went there in June 1931. In November 1932, he tried to return to the United States through Montana and was arrested for illegal entry and jailed by American immigration authorities for 48 days. It was then that he discovered that he was not legally an American citizen, although he had lived here most of his life and had voted in Michigan for 40 years.

Born in Ontario, Foss had been brought here as a child and had assumed that he was an American citizen because his father had filed an intention to take Citizenship.

Tries to Get a Visa

After being freed from the Montana jail, Foss was released with the understanding that he would obtain a visa in Canada. Last June 7 he went to Windsor to get the visa but was denied it because he could not establish proof of Canadian birth. No records were kept in the small town in which he was born..³²

Bewildered, he sought the help of Mayor Croll, who succeeded in locating an aged resident of Foss' birthplace. The latter swore to his birth and the visa permit was finally obtained. In the meantime the exile had to spend his days on Windsor park benches and his nights in a Salvation Army shelter. His expenses on leaving Canada were supplied by Mayor Croll, the Salvation Army, and a daughter, Mrs. Eva Post, of Battle Creek.

³² Records show that a VISA was obtained, with George J. Foss being born in Crediton, Township of Stephen, and Huron County, Ontario, Canada and his father was a Prussian immigrant, with his mother from England. He did not follow-up and attain American citizenship.

History & Genealogy

Historical Narrative For Family Lines

While in the past the weather was not an indicator of a true ice age it was a period of extreme low temperatures from 1816 through 1850. This period effected political, religious and economic conditions mainly in Europe. The main focus of this history section is to relate information found in research papers, pictures and how those absorbing facts are built into family lives.

The main families written about in detail are from England, Ireland, and Netherland; the four primary families are Jackson's, Gailey's, Bronkhorst, and the Munn's. The genealogy research has been done on all family's lines as much as possible, tracing individual births, in England, Netherlands, Germany and Northern Ireland to occupations and families lines.

THE JACKSON'S

Circumstance, it seems have followed Francis Jackson (b.1659) from his landing in the Americas (circa 1676) until he died without a will in the New Jersey territory, 1698.

The Jackson line started out in the Americas in New Castle, Delaware, 1676. The history of New Castle fell into the hands of the English in 1664 when King Charles II granted the land to Duke James of York. The land first was developed under Peter Stuyvesant; Governor of New Netherlands, when he built Fort Casmir, later renamed New Castle by the English, on land purchased from the Native Americans.

What the English found out when territorial hostilities broke out was the land had already been sold to the Swedish crown by the Indians, in 1634. Peter Minuet, representing the Swedish crown controlled this area. The fort was captured by the Swedes in 1654 and renamed Fort Trinity; this was one year before the Dutch regained control, in this three way sovereign land grab.

The 1664 control, and ten-year period of English influence was considered a fortunate mishap for the town which became stronger and stable, playing a prominent role between Dover and Philadelphia. The area had easy access in trade and commerce and a seat of government, which became the capital of Delaware.³³ The English laws greatly influenced local life at the fort.

During a Special Court called on September 26, 1677 it was discussed if the local Captain had the jurisdiction to arrest and hold Francis Jackson, the accused? Francis Jackson after finishing his work at New Castle sent for drink and became "very disturbing" by singing and being loud to those in the fort, and fighting with the local Captain Billop.

With Captain Billop's testimony the Court did find him guilty and was condemned and sentenced to twenty-one lashings and held in the New Castle prison. The judgment was to be reviewed and applied after the next court meeting thirty days later.

The Duke of York's laws did not actually go into effect in Delaware until 1676 when regular courts of justices were reestablished, the Dutch name of Schout was abandoned, and the official known as the High Sheriff was commissioned. This High Sheriff was empowered to issue writs or warrants; to preside as "Chieffe" at any of the meetings, and to nominate and take security from the marshal in each "riding".³⁴ The Laws also provided that each riding should have a turn in having a sheriff chosen in its jurisdiction.³⁵

In 1676, the sheriff lost considerable power when it was resolved that sheriffs could preside over the Justices of the Peace whose duty it was to represent matters in court, and could execute laws or court orders but could not preside or have any vote in court. Consequently, the sheriff of Delaware concurred with those of the English sheriff. The sheriff was authorized to represent but not judge any poor person in court if such person so requested.³⁶ Other duties of the sheriff included administering corporal punishment, executions, collecting assessments and fines execution of warrants of attachments and warrants to summon and empanel a jury, and operate the pillory. Police power was added to the official duties when, in 1676, a prison was built within the Fort and the sheriff was given the responsibility of the prisoners.³⁷ In short, the Duke of York's Law changed the duties of the sheriff from public prosecutor or judge to the authority of police powers.³⁸

With a stronger English approach to the law, against a local influence this case was finally resolved when Abram Man, holder of the Journeyman contract of Francis Jackson ask that charges against Jackson be cancelled for his continued good behavior. Interestingly enough later "Records of the Court Of New Castle on Delaware 1676 - 1681" show that Abram Man became very troublesome within the colony and challenged the courts and threatened the current judge. Later Abram Man left Delaware for areas in Pennsylvania³⁹.

The Quakers who settled in the Philadelphia area in the 1680's believed in educating the populace. They were also tolerant of others' beliefs and ways of life. They had a strong influence on the development of education and established the first public school. With this influence Francis Jackson went on to read and understand the law within the communities. Francis Jackson then moved on to the New Jersey settlements and was chosen "Court Cryer" (1683- 1684), served as an "attorney" and "juryman", in Monmouth County, New Jersey. Francis has been identified to property on or near Burlington Path to Passequencqua Brook, and sections on/between Shrewsbury and Neversink Rivers and a small "hammock"⁴⁰ on Raccoon Island (Narwaticunck River). By 1694 Francis Jackson was referred to as a Yeoman (a man of property and respect). The "Monmouth County New Jersey Deeds: Books A, B, C & D" record numerous records of property witness, juryman, property owner and husband to Elizabeth Dennis (1684).

Monmouth County was first established in 1675, but its boundaries were definitely settled in 1709-1710. It was originally settled by Dutch, Scotch, and some New England emigrants, who removed here about the year 1664.

Francis Jackson died circa 1698 in Shrewsbury, Monmouth County, New Jersey, Elizabeth (Dennis) wife also died within a year leaving children Hugh, William, Mary, Elizabeth (age 12) and a son Francis Jackson, Jr. Francis and Elizabeth's children were assigned foster homes, consisting of family friends with roots in New Jersey.

Although slavery thrived in the small-farm economy in eastern region of New Jersey, Quakers in the western part of the colony pushed for abolition continuously from 1700 onward. This abolitionist sentiment became an organized drive after the American Revolution, flooding the legislative assemblies with antislavery petitions. Population increases among whites in New Jersey during the last half of the 1700s also impacted the antislavery movement. In 1804, the legislature passed a "manumission law", the last northern state to emancipate its enslaved people. But the law had several important qualifications. All black children born after July 4 was to be manumitted once they reached age 25 for boys and age 21 for girls.⁴¹ The large numbers of settlers moving into New Jersey from other states lessened the need for slave labor.⁴²

Hugh Jackson, (Sr.), became father-less and lost his mother when he was 15 years old; he and his siblings were assigned to foster homes by the local courts.

Hugh Jackson, (Jr.), was raised in the area of Shrewsbury, Monmouth County, New Jersey much as his father and grandfather were.

Benjamin Jackson lived in Howell, Monmouth County (New Jersey) area and farmed there raising children and listed as dying in Shrewsbury, Monmouth County, New Jersey. Benjamin was first married to Hannah Willis with nine children, which includes Jesses Jackson born in Howell, Monmouth County, New Jersey. Benjamin married Rebecca Green and they had five children.

Jesse Jackson moved from New Jersey to middle New York, Ontario County as a member of the Farmington Quaker Meeting sometime around 1813.

Jesse Jackson had been assigned as an apprentice under a certificate to the Quaker Rahway and Plainfield Meeting with Hugh Davids in 1806 at the age of eleven. Most of the trades that existed during the later colonial period fell under general occupational headings. Using apprentice programs had the two-fold objective, supplying the labor market and providing education, and training in a trade.⁴³

Quakers from Dutchess County, New York began to hold Meetings for worship in Danby, Vermont in 1760. For quite some time Quakers were the predominant denomination in Danby, but in the 1830's Friends unity was fractured by the Hicksite controversy. Jesse later moved on to Ontario County (Palmyra), New York area around 1813 marrying Edith Smith (1815) who was born in Danby, Rutland County, Vermont. Jesse Jackson joined the off-shoot Hicksite group later on within the Quakers faith.

Jesse and Edith were living in Hartland, Niagara County, New York State by 1820 and in 1834, immigrated to Michigan (Adrian Quaker Meeting) applying for a Federal Land Patent in the area of the "Treaty of Chicago", which was signed in August 29; 1821. The land had belonged to the Potawatomi Indian Tribe. As the demand of more lands for the white settlers increased, the Indians were induced to cede their lands to the United States, under the Treaty of Chicago.

This land contained the future Hillsdale County, and was then opened for purchase, and settlement, by pioneers. The land of Hillsdale County is generally rolling in its topography, and in the early days, those hills were heavily wooded with large stands of hardwood. Much of it was Oak and Walnut. But even though forested, there remained good openings with grass for grazing.⁴⁴ Jesse Jackson purchased land 1835 in Hillsdale County which was organized for county government by the Michigan legislative Council, by approving an Act on February 11, 1835. Jesse's oldest son Hiram S. Jackson stayed on the land in Wheatland Township and raised a family, is buried there not far from Hillsdale, Michigan.⁴⁵ Jesse moved on from Hillsdale County to DeKalb County Indiana, with the purchase of 120 acres of property 1837 in Butler Township, from the office in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

A federal land office opened in Fort Wayne in 1823 to sell public lands, and a town began to grow. The Wabash and Erie Canal arrive and was eventually converted to a rail route from Buffalo to Chicago, improvements that attracted industry starting in the mid-19th century.⁴⁶

The first settlers in Butler Township founded in 1834 would have to have blazed their way into the deep, dim forests mainly with ox teams. These pioneers used hard labor in reducing the wilderness to tillable fields. Jesse Jackson was a very successful farmer and a key figure in the growth of DeKalb County. He was named to the first Petit Jury in March 7, 1838. In addition, a number of the early settlers of DeKalb County were members of the Hicksite Quakers. The Hicksites not only supported the early abolition of slavery, but they believed it morally wrong to cooperate in any way with the slave system. They supported runaway slaves via the Underground Railroad, which ran through Butler Township area, and refused to cooperate with law-enforcement officials in Indiana, seeking to enforce fugitive slave laws. Underground Railroad routes ran from Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and point's north through Southwest Michigan which offered safe houses where escaping slaves could hide as they made their way to freedom in Canada.⁴⁷ Jesse died in 1868 in Butler Township.

Myron Willis Jackson (b.1844) was the youngest of Jesse's family and followed in the long line of farmers, not only from the New Jersey lines, but those from the Michigan homestead to the Indiana roots. Situated just to the north of "the line along which the culture of corn and cotton" met, Hoosier farmers' embrace of corn-livestock farming, a cultural attribute of their roots, simultaneously spawned Indiana's prominence as an agricultural center and ensured that its farm families would, to a remarkable degree, be able to remain self-sufficient well into the post-Civil War era.⁴⁸ All the children were reared on the farm, receiving a limited education in the common schools.

The Jackson families' basic education took place in Butler Township within the township schools described here in 1879. DeKalb County had six (one room) school houses, placed upon Myron married the widow Elizabeth (Gilbert) Yarian on October the third 1869 in Noble County, moved to this adjacent, county and farmed there until his retirement. He was living in Battle Creek, Michigan with son Jesse where he died in 1913.

Jesse Myron Jackson (b. 1889) was growing up in Noble County, Indiana at the same time that the city of Garrett, Indiana (founded in 1875) was developing into a railroad center for lines in the Northeast corner of Indiana. A major point on the Chicago Division of the B&O, Garrett was at one time the home for car shops, a large roundhouse and engine facility, and was the main passenger station between Willard, Ohio, and Chicago. Founded in 1875, Garrett was named for John W. Garrett (1820–1884), president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from 1858 to 1884.⁵⁰

Steam Power

The locomotive engineer must not only know how to run a train engine, but he must also know a great deal about how it was built and how each part works, so that he will know what must be done if anything goes wrong while the engine is out on the road. Therefore, one who aspired to become a locomotive engineer usually started as a machinist or boilermaker's apprentice or in some other beginner's job in a shop or roundhouse where locatives are repaired. Jesse Myron Jackson had gained enough primary education in Indiana and exposure to the local railroad industry, to become a steam engine engineer, and noted as the youngest certified engineer (1911) in the established Grand Trunk rail system. Jesse goes on to retire after some thirty years of service, moving over from steam to diesel engines later in his career.

Orval (Orville) Russell Jackson, Sr. (b.1913), his father had accomplished the honor of being the youngest Railroad Engineer for the Grand Truck System so we can assume that some pressure might have been present to advance or achieve some level of position. With a home full of Railroad Engineering text book and open discussion of engineering knowledge "Stub" was exposed to early technical knowledge. These books were coveted by him and took possession of them and passed them on to the family. Early family photos show Orval (Stub, a family nick name, because of his short stature), and Lawrence (Bud) working on an early automobile frame, building a car. These early skills gave them opportunity to gain knowledge and mechanical abilities for future work opportunities. Orval was noted as being part-owner of the Beacon Air Service located at the Battle Creek Airport, in 1939, during divorce procedures⁵¹. With his skills and training in engines (air engines, gas and diesel) and airframes, plus knowing how to fly helps understand the reason that he could enlist in the Navy during World War Two.

The Navy Fleet Air Wing were scattered over hundreds of miles covering the South Pacific. They operated from locations such as Emirau an island in the Bismarck Archipelago's. This island was part of the continuing strategy of by passing Japanese strong points and occupying islands to aid in cutting the enemy's communication and supplies.

His service in the Navy included two years in the Pacific with two commendation awards (one was at a Meritorious Mast ceremony), good conduct medal and service awards of serving his enlistment in ACORN's which was an organization of men and equipment to rapidly build and operate airfield facilities or rehabilitated airfields.

⁵¹ Calhoun County Court Probate Records, 1939.

After being discharged from the Navy, Orval moved to Otsego, Allegan County, Michigan (1946) working as an automotive mechanic, part owner in a farm implement sales and service, Certified Quality Control Inspector, working for Ingersoll Borg-Warner building amphibian assault vehicles and National Waterlift (Parker-Hannifin), aircraft hydraulics. Later his skills took him to Eaton Corporation (Eaton Yale and Town, Inc.) as an Inspector in the Material Receiving Department. He served as a Union Steward for the local and was also offered a Supervision position which he declined.

Robert Keith Jackson (b.1943) third child out of a family of six boys and one girl graduated from Otsego High School on June 1, 1961, and became the first from the Jackson family line to graduate from college that being, Western Michigan University on December 17, 1966 with a B.S. Degree in Vocational Industrial Education. Cheryl Dee Bronkhorst became his wife on 5th of November 1965. He taught high school in Otsego, Michigan and Warren, Michigan. In 1973, he wrote a book on the history of football in Otsego, Michigan, "Chronicles of Otsego Football 1896 - 1972". This work established that one of the longest standing football rivalries in the state of Michigan is between Otsego, Michigan and Plainwell, Michigan.

Robert joined Eaton Corporations Transmission Division on June 17, 1968 in the Manufacturing Engineering group as a Tool design technician (initially as a summer position); this was after spending two years teaching Vocational Industrial Education in Michigan. From 1968 to 1977 he served in various manufacturing roles in a production facility in Michigan and transferred to Kings Mountain, North Carolina in July 1977, a start up facility. He relocated overseas with his family to Manchester, England plant in July 1980 as Project and Plant Manager for the new Transmission Division facility serving markets in Europe and North America.

The Robert K. Jackson family returned to the United States in 1984 where he managed the Transmission Plant in Shelbyville, Tennessee. He received his M.B.A. Degree from Vanderbilt University on July 11, 1987; was promoted and transferred February 1991 to Galesburg, Michigan as Manager of Manufacturing and Quality. The position was restructured and was the position of Business Unit Manager in Humboldt, Tennessee and transferred to the Axle and Brake Division in February 1993. Robert joined the Truck Components Operations – China group on November 1, 1996 and moved to Shanghai, China as General Manager of Eaton Truck and Bus Components (Shanghai) Co., Ltd., September 01, 1997. The new plant was completed June 1998 and started into production August 1998. Remained in this position June 1996 until October 1, 2001, when he retired after 33.33 years with Eaton.

THE GAILEY'S

The Gailey's are believed to be a branch of the "Clans Buchanan and Gunn's" moved from the Scottish area of Caithness, east of Loch Lomond. The Buchanan's are generally of Celtic descent, of the Pictish racial group the Picts of Scotland and northern and western England having once been a people in conflict with the Romans, and associated with the Caledonians. Caledonia (made up of a mixing of Celts, Picts and Vikings in northern Scotland), the name given by the Romans to northern Scotland, has now become the poetical name for all of Scotland.⁵²

BUCHANAN TARTAN

GUNN TARTAN

The Buchanan supported Robert, King Bruce, in his struggle for Scottish independence, with many of the clansmen being amongst the 7,000 warriors sent from Scotland to aid the French King after the Battle of Agincourt.

The traditions as to the earliest know home of the Gailey's has been the Isle of Bute is a proven fact. The Isle of Bute, in the Firth of Clyde, is near Loch Lomond. The island is about twenty miles long and was formerly the residence of Scottish Kings. That there were three Gailey brothers, who about 1715 emigrated from Scotland to Ulster Province in Northern Ireland, cannot be disputed. Here they settled in County Donegal and County Tyrone. Our family line seems to be the branch, which settled in Letterkenny area, in County Donegal.⁵³

The reasons for the immigration of the three Gailey brothers from the Isle of Bute to Ulster Province in Northern Ireland are based, not on tradition, but on facts. They were staunch Presbyterians, and Whigs (a member of the political party that urged social reform in 18th and 19th century England; was the opposition party to the Tories). As such, they supported the house of Hanover and the Protestant succession to the throne of England.

⁵² Eileen Gailey Kelly and Enid Eleanor Adams, The Gailey - Kelly Lineage (Ancestor Hunters: Victor, Idaho, 1971) pp.2-3

⁵³ Op.cit., Kelly and Adams, p.2

The Gailey's were part of the plantation families living in Ulster, Ireland starting in about 1717. From the early 1700's to around 1820's at least five generations lived in Ulster. Joseph Gailey (b. 1781) lived in Socker Townland, Kilmacrenan, and County Donegal, Ireland. This is near Letterkenny.

Joseph Gailey left Ireland and came to the United States to live in New York State with his three sons in 1850.

The total number of emigrants from the United Kingdom in 1830 amounted to 28,100, from Ireland, 17,596. The proportion of persons of the latter description in 1829, was considerably smaller, while in the present year, 1830, out of an emigration exceeding 28,000, it is pretty nearly ascertained that not more than 6,500 passed through the Canada's, and finally settled in the United States. During this period, the three sons of Joseph Gailey became part of this line of emigration.⁵⁴

Alexander Gailey (b.1812) and his two brothers (Samuel and James) came to America sometime early 1832. All three moved and lived in Lake Luzerne, Warren County area of New York State. Alexander met his future wife Catherine Ramsey near Middlebury, Vermont, married in 1838 and moved to Warren County to farm, the family owned two farms which ran from the top of Gailey Hill down to the Hudson River. The area of Gailey Hill held the first 2nd District one room school house, which has been preserved today within the city of Lake Luzerne, New York.

⁵⁴ Op.cit., Kelly and Adams, p.3

Joseph John Gailey (b. 1839) followed his father in farming; he was born in Vermont in 1839, and settled in Warren County, New York with his parents in 1840. He was a successful farmer and had been excise commissioner, who married Glory Ann Taylor, daughter of Elias and Sarah (Mosher) Taylor, in 1863.

William Abner Gailey (b. 1865) was born in 1865, listed as Glen Falls at the time, and not much is known about his early youthful years. He moved to Michigan and was educated as a railroad engineer with the Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad.

Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad

Crosby Abner Gailey. Crosby (b.1892) was born in Tustin, in the State of Michigan, at aged Twenty-One years and six months, and by occupation a laborer, voluntarily enlisted on the 28th day of October, 1910, as a soldier in the Army of the United States of America, and stationed in the Philippine's until 1913. He returned to Michigan for work and followed his father as a fireman and engineer with the G.R. & I railroad as well as the Grand Trunk system. Crosby married Peal Etta Foss, on December 24, 1914.

The first road established in Osceola County was 1855 and ran through the wilderness from Big Rapids to Hersey. Prior to that date the Muskegon River was used as means of transportation. In 1872 the Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad was completed across Osceola County and ran from east to west. The Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad was completed later that year and created a junction of the railroad in Reed City.

The Cools, Foss's and Edgett's were major family influences on the family lines for the Gailey's: Uriah Cool with son Orville M. Cool fought in the Civil War assigned to 10th New York Heavy Artillery, Company M, enlisted September 1, 1864, Lyme, Jefferson Co., New York. Discharged January 23, 1865. Both made a living as farmers in Nelson Township, Kent County, Michigan (1880 Census). Uriah died in Wisconsin and Orville located in Howard City, Montcalm County, Michigan.

The Foss family may have come to Canada around 1854 from Prussia. According to death certificates the family was born in Waselberg, Prussia (Germany). Charles G. Foss was listed in the Township of Stephen, Huron County, Canada; Concession 8, Lot 8, Concession 9, Lot 7. In 1870 Charles's family was living in Skinner, Bay County, Michigan and by 1874 they had moved to Shiawassee County, Michigan. George Foss, 73 former Cadillac and Meauwataka resident died in (July 8, 1941) Kalamazoo, Michigan Monday morning. He had made his home with his daughters in Battle Creek, Michigan for the past seven years.

William Frank Edgett died December 7, 1914, born in Macomb County, Michigan, in 1835 and died at the home of his son, Cyrus, Tustin. Served in the 13th. Regiment Michigan Infantry during the Civil War, from Shiloh, Tennessee, all through middle Tennessee, through Georgia, to Savannah, Georgia and Northeast to the final battle at Bentonville, North Carolina. He had always been an energetic and sturdy man never requiring the services of a doctor until the illness, which brought about his death. His death was caused by paralysis of the throat, super induced by tonsillitis, contracted while in the northern part of the state this fall, hunting deer. He was ill only about three days. Eight children survive him; J. Frank, William, Mrs. Thomas Johnson, of Battle Creek, Bert, of Buckley, Howard, Mrs. Lydia Gailey and Mrs. Minnie Stevens, of Cadillac and Cyrus, of this place. Mr. Edgett was married to Jane Withey in Galesburg, Mich., in 1855. They came to Tustin in 1878, locating on the homestead west of town. Mrs. Edgett died Jan. 2, 1912.

THE BRONKHORST'S

The Dutch Reformed Church in the Netherland's was essentially the national church during the early nineteenth century. The church schism is generally considered to be the main reason for the Dutch emigration to America during that time period in the mid-nineteenth century. However, there is considerable evidence that horrible economic conditions in the Netherlands also heavily contributed to the emigration. The Netherlands, at that time, went through one of its frequent economic depressions, and the people, especially the poor, suffered the most from these economic downturns. Hence, the main trigger of emigration was religion-based, but the momentum and the magnitude were clearly aided by the deplorable economic conditions in the Netherlands.

Albertus Christiaan Van Raalte was born in the town of Wanneperveen, in the province of Overijssel in the Netherlands in 1811, and is the unquestioned leader of mid-nineteenth century Dutch immigration to Western Michigan, as well as the founder of what eventually became the City of Holland, Michigan. So on October 2, 1846, Van Raalte, accompanied by 53 others, including his own family, departed from Rotterdam on a ship named the Southerner to New York City, where they arrived on November 17, 1846, after their departure.⁵⁵

Life was very difficult in the Michigan frontier so why would the Dutch decide to leave a relatively safe and developed country to settle in a virtually unknown and untamed land? Basic reasons for their emigration are as follows: 1. Economic problems of high taxes on food; population explosion in the Netherlands; prices of woven material dropped drastically affecting employment. 2. Problems with the liberal Church. 3. Letters from America encouraged immigration.⁵⁶

Since 1847 when the first Bronkhorst came to the United States that the family line starts to take form and a direction. Early in the Netherlands and the Low Countries, the use of surnames was not in high use. After Napoleon's invasion of 1817 within this area and other independent "nations", Napoleonic Law applied, with the requirement of mandatory surnames. There exist today a city called Bronkhorst and can be considered the root of this family taking on the name.

The family line picks up with Jan Berends in the Netherlands, than Berend Janson Bronkhorst, Jan Berendsen Bronkhorst, and Jan Berendsen Bronkhorst (II), Jan (i.e. John) Bronkhorst, John Bronkhorst and finally to John Junior Bronkhorst.

Brig "Centurion"

Jan Berendsen Bronkhorst (II), (b. 1835) became the first to emigrant to the United States; at age twelve he left the Netherlands aboard the brig Centurion, in 1847 arriving in New York City within approximately 45 days. Typically emigrants to America left New York City and followed the Hudson River by boat to Albany, then the tedious canal boat passage, which took seven days to Buffalo, and finally a lake voyage on Lake Erie to Detroit, Michigan. If they did not sail around the lower peninsula of Michigan, because of winter weather, from Detroit they would take the Michigan Central Railroad west to the end of the line, Kalamazoo. Jan Bronkhorst married Grace Van Kampen in the Netherlands, with both passing away in Holland, Michigan.

Jan (John) Bronkhorst (b. 1870) was mainly a laborer in factories around Zeeland and Holland, Michigan once working in a local saw mill. John passed away in Wayland, Michigan.

During the Great War, 175,000 Michiganians served in the armed forces. About 5,000 Michigan soldiers died and 15,000 were wounded. John Bronkhorst (b. 1895) enlisted in the Army in 1917 performed his basic training at Camp Green, North Carolina before being sent overseas, through LaHarve, France (Co. B, 39th Infantry) and was wounded twice.

Once he was gassed and the second time he was shot in the thigh. On his return from France he was hospitalized at Lovell Military Hospital No. 28, Fort Sheridan, Illinois, and discharged from the Army on July 30, 1919.

Fort Sheridan, Illinois

This "John" was born in Holland, Michigan but lived in Grand Rapids most of his life. He retired after 35 years of employment (Machine Operator) by the American Box Board Company.

John Junior Bronkhorst, died September 6, 2009 in Tucson, Arizona, John was born August 4, 1921 in Grand Rapids, Michigan the son of John and Hattie (Geukes) and had lived in the Kalamazoo area since about 1941, he graduated from Grand Rapids High School in 1939 and served in the U.S. Army, attached to the Armored Division during World War II was injured during basic training and discharged. John was employed for 38 years at the Michigan Bell Telephone Company until his retirement in 1979.

He was a member of the American Legion Post in Plainwell and the D.A.V. Also in the Mason's a member of the Plainwell Lodge and the Shiner's Club. His parents and a brother Ivan Bronkhorst preceded John in death in 1996. Surviving are two daughters, Bonnie (Tom) Rosenberg of Plainwell, Michigan and Cheryl (Robert) Jackson of Monteagle, Tennessee.

The Bronkhorst married into the Vegter family as well as the Geukes. The Vegter's moved to the United States in 1876, opening a bakery in Zeeland, Ottawa County, Michigan. The Geukes were mainly farmers in the Jamestown, Ottawa County, Michigan area.

As immigrants arrived from the Netherlands, they settled in different localities, arranged and named as they are in the Netherlands. Thus, an emigrant situated with people of his same background. That is how the communities surrounding Holland, Michigan received the names of Zeeland, Vriesland, Drenthe, Overisel and Graafschap⁵⁷

Headcorn is a village and civil parish in the Maidstone District of Kent, England. The parish is located on the floodplain of the River Beult south east of Maidstone. The village is eight miles (13km) from the county town of Maidstone, on the A274 road to Tenterden. In addition to the parish church, there are also churches and chapels for the Methodist, Baptist and Roman Catholic congregations. Headcorn has remained a fairly small settlement, more of a village than a town, as it has not experience the growth of other market towns such as two other local villages Ashford and Sevenoaks. Its center still contains a range of fine houses many dating from sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries. There has been surprisingly little building away from the center, where there has, it is largely of late nineteenth century and later, this has not changed the village nor destroyed its character.

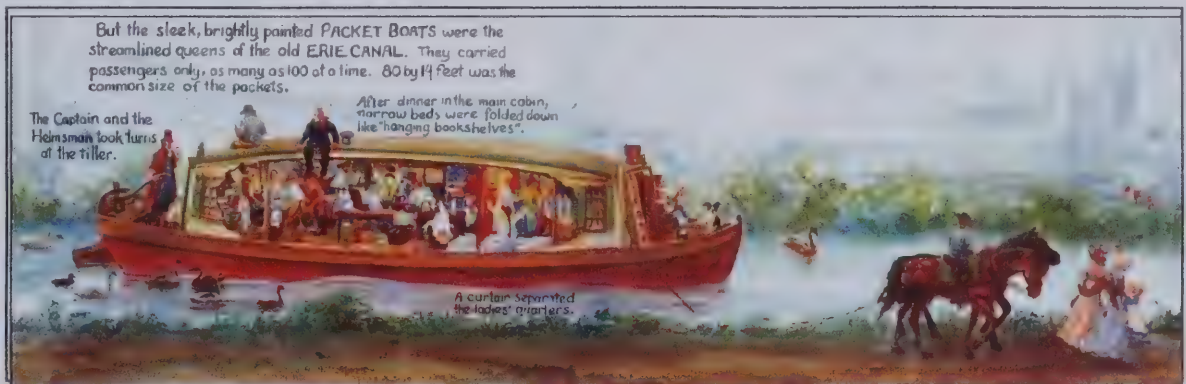

The Munn's family history takes form with the identification of Thomas Munn living in Kent County (abt, 1764 - 1849). His occupation seems to have been a plumber by trade (source date 1784; Bailey's British Directory). Still farming was the main form of work in this area.

George Munn (b. 1810), son of Thomas moved his family from Bredhurst, Kent County, England to the United States in the spring of 1856. George had married Mary Ann Tarrant, of whose family we have little record other than that her mother may have been French. They were married at Headcorn, Kent Co., England. It is generally felt that his occupation in England was farming (Agricultural Laborer).

Passenger list cannot be found to confirm which port they arrived. As most emigrants who came through New York City, traveled north up the Hudson River to Albany, New York to the Erie Canal, across to Buffalo, New York on the shore of Lake Erie and to Detroit, Michigan by boat. This trip took on average six to seven days.

The George Munn family consisted of eight children born to them there, the second child, Thomas, dying at the age of 9 months, and the oldest daughter, Betsey at the age of 16 years. They migrated to Michigan and settled near the village of Plainwell, Michigan. Soon after this they purchased a forty acre farm west of Plainwell in Otsego Township where they spent the remainder of their lives. George took out a certified intention to become a citizen of the United State on January 5, 1859. He died on April 20, 1892, is buried in Hillside Cemetery, Plainwell, Michigan along with Mary Munn, his wife who died on October 11, 1894. of old age.

Eli B. Munn (b. 1855) farmed in Otsego Township, Gunplain Township and East of Martin, Michigan. He came to America (1856) with his parents at the age of one year. His boyhood and early manhood was spent on the family farm a mile west of Plainwell. After his marriage to Ida Reed, they lived on farms near Martin and Plainwell, moving to Plainwell in 1919 retiring and dying June 6, 1927. They lived in a house on Scott Street, which was later bought by Plainwell Paper Company and now torn down.

George Elwood Munn (b. 1885) was born in Cooper Village, north of Plainwell (probably in the northeast corner of the township, Silver Creek), educated in the area rural school system, and worked on the family farm during his early years. Elwood George Munn (*Elwood's birth certificate is filed as George Elwood for some reason he lived his life as Elwood George and signed his name as such*⁵⁸), left Michigan for the West and Idaho in 1908 filing a land grant claim for 160 acres in southwest Idaho in 1911.. Elwood G., as he was always known moved to Idaho in 1908 and applied for homestead land West of Boise, not far from the Snake River basin. The land was on a high rolling ridge in an area of fruit orchards. He assigned the land to a friend who did not take care of the "investment" and the land reverted back to the government in 1922. He never worked his own land, but assigned it to a friend to work the land and handle all tax issues on the property.

Later he met Eva Lela Palmer who worked in the packing barns of the area, and married her in Caldwell, Idaho in 1914. He worked in Payette, Fruitland and New Plymouth during this period. Much of the time he worked as laborer in the fruit growing and packing industry which was growing very fast.

Elwood moved to Mountain Home for work as well as in Wendell, Idaho. Elwood and Eva had five children in Idaho. Mary was born in Mountain Home, with the next four born in Wendell, Idaho (Irene, Eugene, Wilma and Betty). In the Wendell, Idaho area Elwood worked as lumberman more than likely north into the mountain area, and came home on weekends. The family lived outside of Wendell in the rural area. In 1924 the family moved to Michigan and Elwood started working as a clerk in a grocery store and the local paper mill as a laborer, living on Plainwell Street and buying a house on Cushman Street, Plainwell, Michigan. Eli Munn, the father was still alive but in poor health. Ida, Wendell and Wilson were born in Michigan, making up the balance of eight children.

The Munn family had roots in Michigan and yet Charles A. Munn married a woman from Ohio and moved to Nebraska and both he and his one son were successful lawyers in Ord, Nebraska. They served for years as attorney's and locally as officers in the courts and water reservoir boards.

A good example of growth was, in the mid-West was the town of Ord, Nebraska, where the family of Charles Alvin Munn moved to farm, study law and raise a family. In 1874, land was purchased from the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Co. to establish the new town of Ord. At a time when violence between settlers and Native Americans was common, Ord was protected by Fort Hartsuff, 10 miles to the north. Given its proximity to the fort and the railroads connecting it to the outside world, Ord prospered as a market for farmers selling their produce and as a regional hub for commerce. The population grew steadily throughout its first 100 years.

The Palmer's, Bradley's, Hath and the Wilson's are the key family line of the Munn's: Cornelius Martin Wilson was born in New York state (1828), lived in Missouri, Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska. Fought in the cavalry for Missouri during the Civil War. During his life he farmed. Married Margaret Elizabeth Luckenbill in Keokuk, Iowa died in Guthrie, Guthrie County, Iowa, but is buried in the military cemetery at Fort McPherson National Cemetery, in Maxwell, Nebraska.

Fredrick Palmer and Lillian were married in North Platte located in north central, Nebraska situated near the north and south forks of the Platte River, 291 miles west of Omaha, Nebraska. The Union Pacific Railway had an extensive repair shop located here and it is felt that Fred Palmer was a on the railroad here. Married around 1894 he left his family and never seen or heard from again, declared dead, with Lillian remarrying in 1904. They had two children at this time Eva Lela Palmer and Duard Palmer.

Frank Merton Hath was born in Michigan in a farming area, but early on worked as a deck hand with his uncle on ships, traveling around the world and by 1900 in Nebraska, worked as a farm hand and helped manage the Buffalo Bill Ranch (Scouts Rest) in North Platte, Nebraska during Cody's last tour to Europe with Pawnee Bill's Wild West Show. Throughout 1906 saw the final tour of Europe for the Buffalo Bill Cody Wild West Show and by 1908 Buffalo Bill Cody had sold all stock interest in the Wild West Show to Pawnee Bill.

Frank Hath married Lillian Bradley Palmer in 1905, when her husband was declared dead, both were living in North Platte, Nebraska at the time. They moved on to Idaho in 1909. Frank worked in the fruit areas, mining and the lumber mill in Emmett, Idaho. Located on Highway 52 and the shore of the Payette River, Emmett developed in a valley famous for its orchards. It was a shipping point for fruit, sheep, and lumber. He died in 1944 with Lillian (Grandma Hath) dying at the age of 94 in 1971.

Growing Family Memories

Marrying and growing up in a small mid-American city of 4,200 to travels to England, Europe and living in China, literally, Cheryl and I have traveled around the world. Countries visited United States, Canada, England, Ireland, France, Austria, Netherlands, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Brazil, Argentina, Mexico, Dubai U.A.E., China, Japan, Luxembourg, Monaco, Sweden, the Vatican, South Korea, Thailand, Singapore and Hong Kong / Macau.

Traveling the rivers of the Yangtze, Rhine, Main' and the Danube. Knowing the Thames, and Avon rivers, and we must mention the Hudson and Kalamazoo rivers! Family history and genealogy is wonderful, it helps put memories in the proper place and sequence. Holds memories forever and passes them along to family. When leaving Michigan with my family in 1977 I cried deeply, knowing that I would never live in this city again. Yes, you can return, but only twice in your heart! Visits can be many, but first those long lasting memories become harder to conjure up changing all the time, and second, age has pasted you by!
